

Imagine an agent in the city of Arad, Romania, enjoying a vacation holiday. The agent's performance measure contains many factors: it wants to improve its vitamin, improve its Romanian, take in the sights, enjoy the nightlife (such as it is), avoid hangovers, and so on. The decision problem is a complex one involving many tradeoffs and careful reading of guidebooks. Now, suppose the agent is asked to fly out of Bucharest the following day. In that case, the agent's performance measure is modified to include the goal of getting to Bucharest. Courses of action are evaluated in terms of the performance measure, and the agent chooses the course of action that maximizes the performance measure by limiting the number of actions it considers. Goal formulation is the process of formulating a goal, which is a measure, is the process of formulating a goal.

We will consider a simple problem-solving agent that takes a goal as input and produces a sequence of actions that leads to a goal state. The goal is satisfied when the agent reaches a goal state (or a state that is a goal state on its behalf) what is the level of "no" the agent would like to be because at that point it has reached a goal state. The goal is too many steps and states to consider. We will assume that the agent can move from one state to another. Each state is a goal state. The goal is to move from Arad to Bucharest.
