Pennock, 2007 Temperance advocates believed they could eradicate alcohol by persuading consumers to avoid it prohibitionists put their faith in legislation forbidding its manufacture transportation and sale After the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment however reformers sought a new method targeting advertising In Advertising Sin and Sickness Pamela E Pennock documents three distinct periods in the history of the national debate over the regulation of alcohol and tobacco marketing Tracing the fate of proposed federal policies she introduces their advocates and opponents from politicians and religious leaders to scientists and businessmen In the 1950s the Woman s Christian Temperance Union and other religious organizations joined hands in an effort to ban all alcohol advertising They quickly found themselves at odds however with an increasingly urbane mainstream American culture In the 1960s moralists took backstage to consumer activists and scientific authorities in the campaign to control cigarette advertising and mandate labeling Secular and scientific arguments came to dominate policy debates and the controversy over alcohol marketing during the 1970s and 1980s highlighted the issues of substance abuse public health and consumer rights The politics of alcohol and tobacco advertising Pennock concludes reflect profound cultural ambivalence about consumerism and private enterprise morality and health scientific authority and the legitimate regulation of commercial speech Today the United States continues to face difficult questions about the proper role of the federal government when powerful industries market potentially harmful but undeniably popular products

The Electoral Challenge: Theory Meets Practice Stephen C Craig, 2006 If most elections are decided by forces beyond anyones immediate control whether its national economic conditions or voters longstanding partisan attachments do campaigns really matter Scholars and political consultants will give you different answers While scholars insist that consultants operate by the seat of their pants promoting the latest folk wisdom about which strategies and tactics work not knowing one way or the other until its too late consultants claim that the academics tell us what they already know or if not their studies are simply wrong So who is right Stephen Craig takes up the challenge and brings together the voices and ideas of both groups in this engaging and innovative volume He aims to determine what we know and do not know based on empirical rather than anecdotal evidence about the factors that determine election outcomes While the backdrop is academic the focus is practical why do some candidates win and others lose on election day Each chapter contains an essay from a top scholar in the field followed in most cases by a response from the political consultants so students actually interact with this discourse By including the views and experiences of both groups the result is a dialogue from very different yet complementary perspectives on how campaigns matter
